

AIR POLLUTION Continued from Front Page

When asked by the Forward Times whether the lack of zoning has anything to do with the disproportionate air pollution numbers across communities of color and select areas in the Greater Houston area, Hadavia passionately responded that the lack of zoning plays a major part.

“Zoning does contribute to this,” Hadavia stated. “There are rock crushing facilities a block away from a hospital in Kashmere Gardens. Why would you put a rock crushing facility across from a hospital? Well, it’s because there is no zoning that keeps them away from each other.”

Hadavia went on to say that a lack of zoning and historical policies, such as redlining, contributed to most of the air pollution issues in the Greater Houston area.

“Redlined communities, where land was undervalued and people were cut off from each other through freeway expansions, were impacted, and those communities are Black, brown, and lower income,” said Hadavia. “Industry then came in, bought up cheap land, built the refineries, and continued to build the sources of pollution across from hospitals and areas that we see today.”

Hadavia states that one of the primary advocacy messages that Air Alliance Houston wants to emphasize is that these types of actions must stop.

“It is a Title XI civil rights violation to be putting pollution sources in Black and brown communities,” said Hadavia. “This is a civil rights issue, and we are working with other groups who are also fighting and committed to this being addressed.”

One of the most eye-opening revelations shared by Hadavia was something that environmental justice advocates call the “Houston Arrow” which is a visual reminder that when you map any vulnerability measure (poverty, education status, employment history, socioeconomic status, race, ethnicity, etc.) the same interesting and shocking pattern is visible.

In essence, depending on how you choose to look at the “Houston Arrow” on the map, you can see that it is either pointing you to the areas of harmful air pollution or it is showing you where there isn’t any harm. On the map, the census tracks that are Black, brown, and low-income are the areas that the “Houston Arrow” is pointing to with environmental harms.

Areas like River Oaks, Memorial, and higher socioeconomic levels face no environmental harm. Areas like Kashmere Gardens, Sunnyside, Fifth Ward, and lower socio-economic levels are severely affected by these environmental hazards and sources of air pollution.

In a nutshell, every person who is impacted or not affected, should be concerned about this important issue. It is imperative that residents in the Greater Houston area are educated, equipped, and empowered with the right information, data, and tools that will help mobilize advocates, influence public policies, improve air quality, and ensure everyone is free from environmental harm.

CenterPoint Energy Honors Mayor Sylvester Turner with a $1 Million Contribution Toward Energy Assistance for Low-Income Residents

By: Forward Times Newswire

CenterPoint Energy recently announced a special $1 million contribution in Houston Mayor Sylvester Turner’s name for energy bill assistance for low-income residents across the Greater Houston area. The company will make the donation to the Gulf Coast Community Services Association (GCCSA), a local non-profit organization that will manage all aspects of the assistance to residents and families in need, including determining qualified applicants and distributing the funds to them.

“Given Mayor Turner’s selfless commitment and outstanding service to our city for the past eight years, this felt like a fitting way to celebrate him and build upon his legacy of helping others across our communities,” said CenterPoint Energy CEO Dave Lesar. “Throughout his entire career in elected office, Mayor Turner always recognized the importance of supporting underserved neighborhoods and neighbors, and this contribution in his name will make a positive lasting impact.”

GCCSA Chief Executive Officer Dr. Jonita Reynolds said, “We are beyond grateful to have the opportunity for GCCSA, the Community Action Agency authorized by the federal government to provide services to low-income individuals and families in Houston, to help eradicate poverty and provide stability to households struggling to make ends meet. Through CenterPoint Energy and Mayor Turner’s generosity, we are proud to be able to play an integral part in minimizing the adverse impact of energy poverty on low-income households.”

Mayor Turner said, “It has been an incredible honor to serve our great city for my eight years in office. It also has been a privilege to collaborate with corporate leaders like CenterPoint Energy and impactful nonprofits like GCCSA to help the community members who need it most.

“I am deeply grateful for the countless partnerships and initiatives benefiting Houston during my incredible journey as mayor. Together, we were able to do great things,” added Mayor Turner.

GCCSA began accepting applications for energy assistance on December 4, 2023. Low-income residents or families living in CenterPoint Energy’s service areas and in need of assistance with their energy bills can apply online at www.gccsa.org.
